Quick Tidbits...

Founder of "The Louisville Ghost Hunters Society"
Host of "Spooked" - The Ghosts of Waverly Hills
Sanatorium (Aired on the Sci-Fi Channel)

The leather vest...

Is just one of the many attributes of Keith Age personifies as he moves from one paranormal location to another. Founding The Louisville Ghost Hunters Society in 1996, Keith Age is now nationally recognized as a paranormal star.

In 1998, Keith Age became associated with the American Ghost Society, and is now one of the longest standing members in that organization. With over a quarter of a century of paranormal investigation & research under his leather belt, Keith Age continues to work with some of the leading experts in paranormal research. Most recently, his work involving "The Waverly Hills Sanatorium" has landed him a lead role in the Sci-Fi Channel exclusive "Spooked: The Ghosts of Waverly Hills Sanatorium," which is now available on DVD in national markets.

"Over a quarter of a century of paranormal research"

How Keith Got "Spooked"...

When Philip Adrian Booth, Christopher Saint Booth, and Shane Dax Taylor started filming their movie "The Death Tunnel," at Waverly Hills Sanatorium - they didn't know what they would run into. Strange EVP's, ghostly figures, and other unexplained phenomena began to emerge from the audio and film taken during the grueling shoot, and they needed someone to come in and help make sense of it all. Keith Age, Founder of The Louisville Ghost Hunters Society was that man. Keith, along with Members of the LGHS were able to assist both Philip and Chris on the investigative data recorded in Waverly Hills Sanatorium, and opened a whole new chapter in what would become a horror film (The Death Tunnel,) that would also spawn a documentary called "Spooked: The Ghosts of Waverly Hills Sanatorium." Simply put, there was too much real evidence of paranormal phenomena to not warrant the documentary, which Keith Age so graciously hosts.

A Basic Introduction To: The Louisville Ghost Hunters Society

99% is the key. 99% of what is found by The Louisville Ghost Hunters Society can be explained in a rational scientific way. The remaining 1% is left to keep both Keith Age, and The Louisville Ghost Hunters Society continually doing both private and public investigations.

LGHS investigations are conducted in a non-metaphysical manner, and use a quagmire of video, audio, background research, and electromagnetic testing to determine paranormal claims by both private and public sites.

All investigations are completely confidential in residential homes, and are conducted in a consistent and professional manner by trained paranormal researchers.

For this reason, The Louisville Ghost Hunters Society remains one of the oldest and most respected paranormal research groups in Louisville, Kentucky - and continues to grow with over 100 active members - and thousands of curious non-active members.

Our research is taken seriously, as an investigation requires a large amount of background research on both the location, and individuals making claims that paranormal activity has occurred.

When the 99% explainable cases fail to produce results with the LGHS investigation team, the remaining 1% begin to document and analyze the data collected at the investigation site to try to determine the possible cause.

Keith Age, along with his members of The Louisville Ghost Hunters Society provide investigations free of charge, and are available to help anyone. []

Documented Cases

Some of the best places to visit in Louisville, Kentucky also carry their own haunted tales. The Louisville Ghost Hunters Society has investigated numerous Kentucky (and outside of Kentucky) locations such as: The Waverly Hills Sanatorium, The Willard Library (Evansville, Indiana), Bobby Mackey's Music World (Covington, Kentucky), and many others!

If you want to check out all of the work that the LGHS has done publicly, please visit the LGHS website at: <http://www.louisvilleghs.com>.

Urban Legends

Did you know there was a headless lady in Iroquois park? How about the mysterious "Pan" statue in Cherokee park?

Urban Legends and Stories are collected, and examined by The Louisville Ghosts Hunters Society to bring a haunting perspective to local landmarks in Kentucky - some of which are historical in their own right.

Both haunting stories, urban legends, and other "un-investigated" paranormal activities are part of the historical data the LGHS gathers to further examine the paranormal. []

99% of all paranormal cases can be explained. The remaining 1% is what keeps the LGHS members on their toes!
